A reported 93% of all face-to-face communication occurs nonverbally. Much of the nonverbal communication we project outwardly, as well as the nonverbal communication we interpret as projected by others, is done so without conscious effort. What if we missed out on a large portion of the nonverbal communication that is ongoing around us? Is it possible that we could become more effective and more efficient in our work-place communication by being more in-tune with nonverbal communication? Dr. Barry will provide us with an entertaining, yet instructive adventure into this important element of communication.
